Continuing Professional Development Programme

- Social Dreaming -

Dreaming has, since the time of Freud and Jung and probably since mankind was on earth, been recognised as being a significant route to personal insight. The concept of Social Dreaming holds that, through sharing our dreams with others, we can discover deeper meanings and insights into human experience.

Social Dreaming is a relatively recent concept in organisational work but the literature available is an indication of its ever increasing influence and contribution to change. Social Dreaming is increasingly applied to work and social contexts as a transformational process contributing to change and development.

The theoretical background of the workshop is based on integration of psychodynamics and new developments of modern systems theory. Like all GAP learning events this workshop will be experiential in its learning methodology. Participants will be invited to bring dreams and make them available for the group to associate to their social content and meaning. Reflection in small groups will offer opportunities to develop insight and understanding into current social realities.
